Pt: Spelling

When I woke up this morning I said goodbye to my mum friends in London and set sail. After a few days at sea I spotted a huge, swerling storm and towering towards us. I was scrubbing the deck my hands where aching and I had 12 million splinters. Ten whirl pools appeared that only meant one thing the storm was near there was blinding lightning and the roaring thunder do not mix. The crashing, wooden crates that slid across the ship and smashed to pieces.

After the gustrading storm there was hundres of crew was drenched in the choppy sea. I had to help get all the crew well not all of them some where cast in the riptide and drowned.

When we struggled to get them out I spotted my Island I felt so exited and relieved and there was my mum and dad holding there hands wide open
