We are learning about the different denominations in the religion of Christianity.

Catholics Baptists Orthodox Christians Plymouth Brethren Church of Christian Science.
Protestants Methodists Quakers Unitarians Adventists

What are the different denominations of Christianity?

There are lots of denominations, but I will list ten of them first: Catholics, Protestants, Baptists, Methodists, Orthodox Christians, Quakers, Plymouth Brethren, Adventists and finally Church of Christian Science. I will now lead on to explain what a denomination is as it is very important because I to have listed ten of them and you may not know what I am talking about.

What is a denomination?

In as much detail as possible a denomination is a section or a certain part of a religion. Although they may not all have the same beliefs for example Catholics recognise as the pope as a leader to them and that he represents God. Unlike Protestants who do not see the pope as a person of authority. They have other leaders like the Archbishop of Canterbury.

What are these different aspects of Christianity?

The different aspects of Christianity are the Holy Trinity, the Father and the Son known as Jesus the father is remembered as God. Christians believe in the Bible and its holy teachings; The main people Christians believe in are God and Jesus but in the bible there is a lot about disciples too.

What does it mean for Christians?

It means for Christians The beliefs of Christians mean that they are showing themselves to be proud and loyal towards God and Jesus; It shows that they are following the Bible it also shows that they are true to their beliefs.
